It is valuable because of its rarity, resistance to corrosion, electrical conductivity, malleability, ductility, and beauty. If you ask people where gold comes from, most will say you obtain it from a mine, pan for flakes in a stream, or extract it from seawater. However, the true origin of the element predates the formation of the Earth. Scientists believe all the gold on Earth formed in supernovae and neutron star collisions that occurred before the solar system formed. In these events, gold formed during the r-process. Gold sank to the Earth's core during the planet's formation. It's only accessible today because of asteroid bombardment. Theoretically, it's possible to form gold by the nuclear processes of fusion, fission, and radioactive decay. It's easiest for scientists to transmute gold by bombarding the heavier element mercury and producing gold via decay. Gold cannot be produced via chemistry or alchemy. Chemical reactions involve a transfer of electrons between elements, which may produce different ions of an element, but the number of protons in an atom is what defines its element. All atoms of gold contain 79 protons, so the atomic number of gold is 79. It's possible to transmute mercury into gold by making it unstable so it decays. JacobH / Getty Images Making gold isn't as simple as directly adding or subtracting protons from other elements. The most common method of changing one element into another (transmutation) is to add neutrons to another element. Neutrons change the isotope of an element, potentially making the atoms unstable enough to break apart via radioactive decay. Japanese physicist Hantaro Nagaoka first synthesized gold by bombarding mercury with neutrons in 1924. While transmuting mercury into gold is easiest, gold can be made from other elements—even lead! Soviet scientists accidentally turned the lead shielding of a nuclear reactor into gold in 1972 and Glenn Seaborg transmuted a trace of gold from lead in 1960. Thermonuclear weapon explosions produce neutron captures similar to the r-process in stars. While such events are not a practical way to synthesize gold, nuclear testing did lead to the discovery of the heavy elements Seeger, Philip A.; Fowler, William A.; Clayton, Donald D. (1965). "Nucleosynthesis of Heavy Elements by Neutron Capture". The Astrophysical Journal Supplement Series. 11: 121. doi:10.1086/190111 Sherr, R.; Bainbridge, K. T. & Anderson, H. H. (1941). "Transmutation of Mercury by Fast Neutrons". Physical Review. 60 (7): 473-479. doi:10.1103/PhysRev.60.473 Willbold, Matthias; Elliott, Tim; Moorbat, Stephen (2011). "The tungsten isotopic composition of the Earth's mantle before the terminal bombardment". Nature. 477 (7363): 195-8. doi:10.1038/nature10399 WHAT IS A CERTIFICATE OF ORIGIN? A certificate of origin is a document that certifies the country where the goods originated. A certificate of origin may be required by the customs authority of the country where the goods are being imported. It's also frequently used to determine how much duty the importer will pay to bring in the goods. There are two types of certificates of origin you may need to create: a Generic Certificate of Origin or a Free Trade Agreement Certificate of Origin. Most countries accept a generic certificate of origin form that includes information about the exporter and importer, the description and harmonized tariff code of the goods, and the country of origin. These certificates are usually prepared by the exporter and certified by the local chamber of commerce. The importer is heavily dependent upon the assistance and cooperation of its U.S. suppliers in producing accurate and well-documented declarations of origin. Previously, companies were required to download a certificate of origin form, manually enter the information, print the form, sign it, deliver it or courier it to a chamber of commerce office, wait to get it reviewed and signed by the appropriate chamber employee, return it or courier it back to the company office, and courier the signed and certified documents to the importer. Today, companies can enter their shipment information online, transmit it to a chamber, and get a certified certificate of origin in less than a day and at a fraction of the cost. Online certification saves on couriers, travel time, postage, and parking fees. Generate a Generic Certificate of Origin The United States-Mexico-Canada Agreement (USMCA) officially replaced NAFTA on July 1, 2020. At that point NAFTA and the NAFTA Certificate of Origin became invalid. Unlike NAFTA, the USMCA does not have a specific form that must be used to make a claim for preferential duty rates under the agreement. Instead, whichever party is certifying that the goods meet the rules of origin, must provide, at minimum, certain data elements as outlined in the agreement to support the claim. That information can be provided on the invoice or on a separate attached document—a certificate of origin like the one available here. The document can be provided in a hard copy or digital format. Importers must have the certificate in their possession at the time they make this claim. If they don't have it at the time of importation, they can make their claim up to one year later. International protocol dictates that a free trade agreement be referred to using the country in which a person resides first. Therefore, in the United States, it is called USMCA. In Canada, it is officially known as the Canada-United States-Mexico Agreement (CUSMA) in English and the Accord Canada-États-Unis-Mexique (ACEUM) in French. In Mexico, it is called the Tratado entre México, Estados Unidos y Canadá (T-MEC). Download the USMCA Certificate of OriginDownload the CUSMA Certificate of Origin (English) Download the CUSMA Certificate of Origin (French)Download the T-MEC Certificate of Origin (Spanish) The U.S.-Chile Free Trade Agreement (FTA) provides lower duties on certain goods originating in and traded between the United States and Chile. The Chilean importer is responsible for claiming preferential treatment for a given shipment at the time the goods are cleared through Customs. (Under the U.S.-Chile FTA, the ultimate responsibility for the validity of the claim lies with the importer, not the exporter, as it is under NAFTA.) In order to claim the preferential duty rate, the importer must provide to Chilean Customs a written declaration, which may or may not be in the form of a certificate of origin. Despite the fact that the ultimate responsibility for making the declaration lies with the importer, the information needed to support the declaration will have to be provided by the producer. The written declaration that the goods are originating may be produced by the exporter, importer or producer of the goods. If someone other than the producer (i.e., the exporter or importer) issues the declaration, it must be based upon either: a. A written declaration of origin issued by the producer, or b. The issuer's intimate knowledge of the product, its manufacture, and its components. The importer is heavily dependent upon the assistance and cooperation of its U.S. suppliers in producing accurate and well-documented declarations of origin. Download U.S.-Chile Certificate of Origin The United States-Colombia Free Trade Agreement (FTA) entered into force on May 15, 2012. On the day of implementation, more than 80% of U.S. industrial goods exports to Colombia became duty-free including agricultural and construction equipment, building products, aircraft and parts, fertilizers, information technology equipment, medical and scientific equipment, and wood. It is the responsibility of the importer in Colombia to make a claim for the FTA-negotiated preferential tariff rate for qualifying products. However, the exporter or producer may be asked by the importer, customs broker, or the Colombia Customs Service to provide a written or electronic certification or other information to support the importer's claim. While there is no required form for certifying origin, this is form that is commonly used by many exporters and importers. The importer is heavily dependent upon the assistance and cooperation of its U.S. suppliers in producing accurate and well-documented declarations of origin. Download U.S.-Colombia Certificate of Origin The U.S.-Australia Free Trade Agreement (FTA) is an agreement between the United States and Australia that allows both nations to establish free trade between the two nations through the reduction and elimination of barriers to trade in goods and services. In order to qualify, a product must qualify as "originating" under the terms of the Agreement. This means that the product must have sufficient U.S. or Australian content or processing to meet the criteria of the Agreement. If goods contain only U.S. or Australian inputs, they qualify. If they contain some inputs from other countries, they still might qualify if they meet specific criteria set out in the Rules of Origin of the Agreement. The U.S.-Australia FTA calls for the importer to make a claim of preference. The importer may therefore ask the exporter for this information. The exporter (seller) may give confirmation, in an un-prescribed format, of why the goods qualify as "originating," which the importer may use to validate its claim. It is advisable to work with your importer and provide your importer with a written statement of origin upon request. Customs officials can require importers to maintain documents relating to purchases and costs for up to five years after importation, should investigation and verification of claims be required. Customs officials can also seek information from exporters in verifying claims. Download U.S.-Australia Certificate of Origin The United States-Panama Trade Promotion Agreement (PATPA) eliminates tariffs and removes barriers to U.S. services; provides a secure, predictable legal framework for investors; and strengthens protection for intellectual property, workers, and the environment. It is the responsibility of the importer in Panama to make a claim for the preferential tariff rate for qualifying products. However, the exporter or producer may be asked by the importer, customs broker, or Panama Customs Service to provide a written or electronic certification or other information to support the importer's claim. While there is no required form for certifying origin, this form is commonly used by many exporters and importers. The importer is heavily dependent upon the assistance and cooperation of its U.S. suppliers in producing accurate and well-documented declarations of origin. Download Sample Panama Certificate of Origin The United States-Peru Trade Promotion Agreement (PETPA) eliminates tariffs and removes barriers to U.S. services; provides a secure, predictable legal framework for investors; and strengthens protection for intellectual property, workers, and the environment. It is the responsibility of the importer in Peru to make a claim for the preferential tariff rate for qualifying products. However, the exporter or producer may be asked by the importer, customs broker, or Peru Customs Service to provide a written or electronic certification or other information to support the importer's claim. While there is no required form for certifying origin, this form is commonly used by many exporters and importers. The importer is heavily dependent upon the assistance and cooperation of its U.S. suppliers in producing accurate and well-documented declarations of origin.
